Abstract

A camera acquires destination information, then accepts an instruction for capturing an image, and sends the captured image data to a destination indicated in the destination information. Accordingly, this camera can protect the user from missing the next shutter opportunity while transmitting the image, or from neglecting to transmit the captured image data due to the bothersome nature of the task.

5